Spoken English Proficiency Course

A Spoken English Proficiency course complements the core courses of the B.A. English Honours syllabus (CBCS) under the University of Calcutta by enhancing students' oral communication skills, a crucial component of literature and language studies. Core courses like British Poetry, Drama, and Indian Writing in English demand not only analytical skills but also articulate expression. Spoken English proficiency aids students in delivering presentations, engaging in discussions, and interpreting texts more effectively. Additionally, it strengthens their overall language fluency, preparing them for academic seminars, debates, and interviews, bridging the gap between theoretical knowledge and practical application.

Academic Writing in English for ESL Learners

In Semester I (CC-2), course like European Classical Literature introduces students to foundational texts. Here, the Academic Writing for ESL learners course focuses on building essential writing skills, such as sentence construction, grammar, and summarizing literary texts. Students also learn the basic conventions of academic writing.

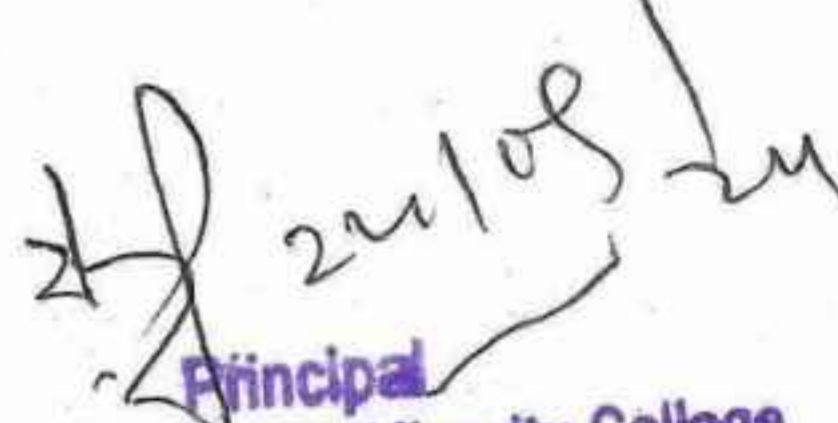

In Semesters III & IV, courses like British Literature (14th to 17th century) and British Romantic Literature require students to engage in critical analysis and textual interpretation. The ESL writing course can now enhance their ability to structure arguments, develop thesis statements, and use textual evidence effectively.

In the final semesters, courses such as Modern European Drama and Postcolonial Literatures demand research-oriented essays. The ESL writing course complements this by teaching students how to write research papers, cite sources (MLA/APA), and integrate secondary criticism into their work.

This mapping aligns the progression of ESL academic writing skills with the content of the Core Courses across semesters.

Heart of Humanity: Understanding Human Values

To accurately map the "Heart of Humanity: Understanding Human Values" course with the Core Courses of the B.A. Political Science (General) syllabus (CBCS) under the University of Calcutta, especially on the topic of Human Rights, we can draw parallels based on the following analysis:

Semester I (Core Course: Understanding Political Theory):

This course introduces students to political ideologies, which can include the discussion of human rights within political thought. The "Heart of Humanity" course emphasizes understanding values, which aligns with the exploration of political theories focused on human dignity and equality.

Semester III (Core Course: Indian Government and Politics):

Human rights issues in India, such as the role of the judiciary, fundamental rights, and political values of democracy and secularism, are discussed in this course. These topics resonate with understanding humanity and human values from a political rights perspective.

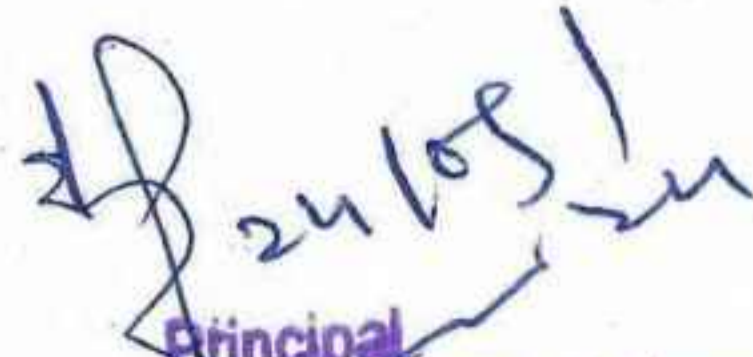

Semester V (Core Course: Human Rights in a Comparative Perspective):

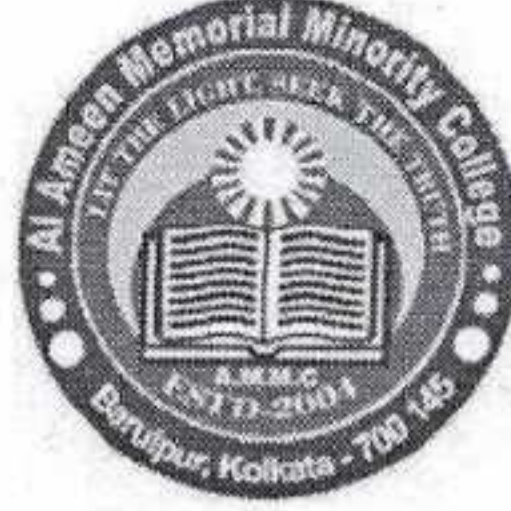

This core course explicitly deals with human rights, offering a direct correlation with the "Heart of Humanity" course. Both explore the ethical and moral foundation of human rights, their global significance, and their role in shaping human values in society.

Through these courses, students gain insights into the application of human values in political discourse, especially regarding human rights in diverse contexts.
